

1930s and 1940s Pop Culture

Across

2. Music associated with the feeling of sadness but can be joyous and loud
4. A superhero who debuted in a 1938 comic who can fly and has heat vision
9. A device used to take pictures and was popular in the 1930s
12. A device used to broadcast a person's voice to relay a sports event or other event. It was used by many families during the Great Depression
16. A famous British-American entertainer that used the radio to spread his jokes
17. African American jazz musician who played the trumpet and was given the nickname "Satchmo"
18. Famous actress who landed the main role in one of the most famous technicolor films of the 1930s

19. A Disney film about a deer who loses his mother to a hunter
20. A novel written by George Orwell in 1949 that consists of four numbers

Down

1. African American Olympic athlete who won multiple gold medals in the 1936 Olympics
3. African American singer who won 13 Grammy awards and was given the title "The First Lady of Song"
5. A baseball player known for hitting the most home runs of his time and his name resembles the name of a famous chocolate bar
6. A famous baseball player that was the first African American to play the sport professionally in the 1940s
7. Well-known Marvel character that was created in 1941 and is known for his shield

8. Famous singer who starred in the 1930 film "King of Jazz" and shares a name with a commonly known search engine
10. A 1937 novel written by John Steinbeck about two men named George and Lenny who search for a job at a farm
11. A famous movie made in 1933 about a giant ape and a lady. A famous scene from the movie includes the ape scaling a skyscraper in the end.
13. A type of jazz that focused on the off beat
14. A technicolor film that was highly popular in the late 30s portraying a girl from Kansas
15. A 1938 Disney film about a woman who escapes from her evil stepmother to live with a bunch of dwarves