

Attachments

Across

- 10. The idea that the nature of infants' attachments is due to innate personality factors.
- 11. Recognising and responding appropriately to infants' needs.
- 12. The degree of distress shown by infants when in the presence of an unfamiliar person.
- 13. A two way, enduring emotional tie.

Down

- 1. Innate, infant behaviours that stimulate adult interaction and caregiving.
- 2. A template for future relationships.
- 3. Childcare provided by children's homes.
- 4. The idea that there is consistency between early emotional experiences and later relationships.
- 5. The belief that attachments are formed with people who feed infants.

- 6. Using techniques that are only relevant to one culture to study another.
- 7. An innate tendency to become attached to one particular adult.
- 8. The coordinated rhythmic exchanges between carer and infant.
- 9. Long term disruption of the attachment bond.
