

Ch 12 Mobile, Linux and macOS

Across

5. The configuration information that a cellular phone needs to communicate on networks other than its own so that a call can be made outside of the carrier's network
6. A closed source Unix based operating system for Apple's iPhone and iPad
8. A type of software designed to provide low-level functionality for a device
10. The MacOS backup tool
13. Apps that display information dynamically on the home screen
14. Programs that are executed on mobile devices

15. Used on Android devices to gain privileged or root level access for modifying code or installing software that is not intended for the device
16. Third-party developers can create apps for iOS devices by using this Apple product
17. The sequence of instructions that is written in human readable language, before it is turned into machine language

Down

1. Giving the user the ability to directly install apps without going through the Android storefront interface is known as
2. A file system search feature in macOS
3. A security credential manager for Ubuntu Linux

4. Used mostly in physical store transactions, a consumer pays for something by waving the phone near the payment system
7. Typically used on iOS devices to remove manufacturer restrictions allowing them to have full access to the file system
9. A location of the OS that keeps code isolated from other resources and other code that helps protect a mobile device from malicious software
11. An open source, Linux based smartphone/tablet operating system
12. A private network that uses a public network to connect remote sites or users together