

Expository Unit Terms

Across

6. There are many ways an author organizes their information, we call this the () between the information given.

7. Opinion statements will have this part of speech

11. This is a technique you use to put what you read in your own words

12. Also known as the central Idea

13. Author's use these to show facts

14. This is a term that is used to begin a commonplace assertion

15. This is the main idea of an article

16. Expository texts are written because the author's purpose is to

Down

1. These help the article's information develop, they are examples or data.

2. This is a general statement that we tell each other time and time again and we begin to believe the statement because it seems logical.

3. When an author uses language that is exaggerated to create a feeling in the reader.

4. A statement that can be proven with data, numbers, or statistics.

5. When the author judges a group because of certain things the group shares

8. The author's beliefs

9. A commonplace assertion will not include these and a factual claim will.

10. When an author favors one side more than the other

Word Bank

Thesis

paraphrase

bias

relationships

loaded language

opinion

Main Idea

stereotype

Commonplace assertion charts

Factual claim

Facts

generally

Supporting details

inform

Adjectives