

Fiction and Non-fiction Terms

Across

1. the "title" of an article
5. the person who wrote the article can be found on the
7. graphs, definitions, ,maps, etc. added to an article
11. when we make the description more vivid by appealing to the 5 senses
14. a quote that can be found in the article and is enlarged and often put in a box
15. the person who wrote the novel is called the
17. type of characterization when we assume something about a character because of the way the narrator has described them and their actions

18. the feeling that the story creates for the reader

19. the struggle the characters face, that drives the story
20. when a text is made up we call it
21. when a person, place, or an object represents an idea

Down

2. the perspective from which you write a feature article
3. when a text presents us with facts and information we call it
4. type of characterization when the narrator tells us that the character is lazy
6. the way the narrator reveals information about the characters

8. when we attribute human characteristics to something that is non-human

9. a feature is different from a news article in that a feature focuses on how the issue _____ people
10. the person who is telling the story from a particular point of view is called the
12. mini titles throughout the article to divide article
13. the opening sentence or paragraph of the article, hints at the angle
16. the lesson we can learn from a story that is universal