

Linux puzzel 3

Across

4. A command used to partition hard disks; it displays a graphical interface in which the user can select partitioning options.
5. A command used to configure btrfs filesystem options and check btrfs filesystems for errors.
7. A command used to create partitions on a GPT hard disk. It uses an interface that is very similar to fdisk.

8. A series of tracks on a hard disk that are written to simultaneously by the magnetic heads in a hard disk drive.

10. The process in which a filesystem is placed on a disk device.

11. A command used to view LVM logical volumes.

12. A command used to identify any users or processes using a particular file or directory.

Down

1. A command that displays disk free space by filesystem.

2. The organization imposed on a physical storage medium that is used to manage the storage and retrieval of data

3. A command used to prepare newly created swap partitions for use by the Linux system.

6. The unit of data commonly used by filesystem commands; a block can contain several sectors.

9. A command used to create LVM logical volumes