Strategies of Language Development

Across

5. Purpose of an utterance, that is, to gain information, request permission, or provide information
7. Eye contact with a communication partner; used to signal intensified attention
8. Shared action sequences of mother and child, often routines; provides the basis for many scripts.
9. Memorized verbal routine or unanalyzed chunk of language often used in everyday conversation.
10. the Adult recasting of a child's utterance that makes it more grammatically correct, adds new information, or changes the form.

Down

1. phase begins at birth and continues into the second half of the first year, approximately 8 months of life. After this, the purpose of communication becomes less about getting attention for needs and more driven with a purpose
2. intent continues for the remaining portion of life
3. Scaffolding or predictable structure of an event that provides "slots" for participation and aids comprehension
4. meaning that the goal of the infant is to get attention, but the communication must still be interpreted by the caregiver
6. Conversational device used by a mother with a preschooler to maintain the conversation and aid the child in making on-topic comments
