

Name: _____

Theoretically Speaking: Crossword Puzzle

Across

2. defined a nurse's position as an interpersonal relationship whose goal is to help their patients find meaning and growth from their experience through a five stage process

7. theory used in mental health treatment that shows an absence of absolutes in healthcare, with fluidity as the main goal in approaching the illness

8. known as a theory of the three c's; focuses on the patient, the attention given to the patient, and addresses the role of nurses in this process

12. developed a theory that ensures the patient will continue to get better once they leave the hospital and are out of nursing care

13. focused on a relationship with the patient and teaming up to reach goals of care

14. states that all people want to care for themselves and can recover more quickly and holistically by doing so

16. studied children and developed a theory on moral development that was separated into 3 levels

18. her nursing theory focuses on a holistic approach and system stability that consists of 3 energy resources: several lines of resistance, normal line of defense, and flexible line of defense

19. specialized in pediatrics and the perinatal field; this person's theory was meant to be used throughout pregnancy and after childbirth to help mothers connect with their babies

20. proposed a nursing model that advocates for efficient and effective behavior to prevent illness and identifies the goal of the nurse is to help patients maintain equilibrium

Down

1. focused on the prevention of acute and chronic illnesses by promoting healthy lifestyles and recognizing risk

3. contributed greatly to nursing education; developed a nursing grading scale that prevented students from receiving their qualifications until they successfully proved their abilities

4. this person was trying to treat schizophrenia patients with treatments that were deemed experimental (Hint: do not include hyphen, only letters)

5. her nursing theory explains that the role of the nurse is to identify a patient's need for help and defines four main elements of nursing: philosophy, purpose, practice, and the art

6. this theory has to be able to understand the role of culture in the health of the patient

9. reflects that most human behavior is learned and controlled through observation, imitation, and modeling. This is over one's own motivation, behavior, and social environment

10. specialized in oncology nursing; in this person's model, the goal of nursing is to promote adaptation and maintain wholeness using the principles of conservation

11. created a nursing comfort theory that identifies relief, ease, and transcendence as the three forms in which comfort exists

15. created a checklist focused mainly on how illness has affected the patients' lives

17. views nursing as a science and an art, and integral with the universe. The knowledge part of nursing is the science and the creativity is the art